

Bulgarian pop singers

Polly Plamenova Genova is a Bulgarian pop singer. She represented Bulgaria in two Eurovision Song Contests, and lead the European Children's Eurovision Song Contest in 2015, which was held in Sofia, Bulgaria. In 2017, Polly also coached in the show “The Voice of Bulgaria”.*

Her musical career began when she was only four years old. In 1995 she became the first member of the newly formed children's vocal group "Bon-Bon". She has since participated four times in the Bulgarian Eurovision Song Contest - in 2005 and 2006 with Melody and later in 2009 and 2011 as a single performer.

In 2011, her song "Na inat" won the opportunity to participate in Eurovision 2011, in Dusseldorf. In February 2016, Bulgarian National Television chose Poly Genova as a representative of the country at Eurovision 2016, where she performed the song "If love was a crime." After being chosen as one of the ten participants to reach the semi-final, she finished fourth in the final round, right after Ukraine, Australia, and Russia.

Children's Vocal Group

“Jan Bibian”

Stara Zagora,

Bulgaria

Children's Vocal Group "Jan Bibian" was formed 18 years ago. Children from the age of 6 to 11 take part in it. "The Bibians" have recorded 5 albums, using music that includes work by the ex-Bibian Ilian Filipov, who is now 15 years old.

The lyrics of most of the songs are written by the Bibians themselves, and this makes their songs very interesting. The Bibians have a lot of fans who love their music.

The arrangements of the songs of the Bibians are made according to modern trends in pop music, including a rich band presence.

CVG "Jan Bibian" takes part in many children's festivals and competitions. The vocal group is a laureate of the International Children's Festivals of Arts in Bulgaria, Italy, Serbia, Montenegro, Romania and Croatia.

The Bibians love to connect with other children interested in music, and exchange ideas and materials with them.
